Most anywhere in Maine, golf facilities are available within a half-hour ride. The state's 93 golf courses are more heavily concentrated in the Greater Portland area, but from York to Fort Fairfield picturesque links challenge the golfer.

Maine now ranks fifth nationally in golf holes per capita, according to National Golf Foundation statistics, and participation in the sport has followed the national trend. Golf organizations promote 75 tournaments annually, and tournament participation has increased 300 percent in the last ten years. Several Maine golf courses have been ranked with the most characterful in the nation. The Kebo Valley Club at Bar Harbor, the Aroostook Valley Country Club at Fort Fairfield, the Penobscot Valley Country Club at Orono and the York Golf and Tennis Club all are courses of championship length. Some of the most scenic, with spectacular views of lake, mountain or sea shore, are the Norway Country Club, the Wilson Lake Country Club at Wilton, the Cliff Island Country Club and the Presque Isle Country Club.

Generally, Maine's golf courses are not overcrowded, nor have they adopted the trend toward excessive fees designed to lessen patronage. There is no better place anywhere in the nation to spend a golf vacation than Maine.
